Chester had, in plain English, founded his revolution based on or modeled after Christian networks, cell structures and using the latest of computer science.

Most of the key players came from the Christian milieu. The Christian part provided a common ideology and language. Chester and Ian were both frequent guests of hotels. Ian consumed drugs, Chester had a scientific understanding, interest in the subject (Huxley's LSD, Freud's cocaine, etc.).

The helipads were an extension of the culture of luxury hotels and tech companies.

Chester, for his part, had a strong dislike of capitalism.

"Money was printed like on printing press."
